A Good Story of Its Kind. The Paris correspondent of the New York Tribune in illustration of the slight causes that sometimes lead to great events, tells a romantio story of a French officer, who, being expelled from the army, went to Zaluland and taught the Zu'us the science of war. According to a statement of an exofficer of the Imperial Guard, Captain Prosper La Lugare, in January, 1863, a party of army officers and swell young men were dining together at the then fishion-able Treis Freres Proveneaux. Dinner being over a card table was opened and every one say lown to play at lan: quenet. Captain Lambert, av officer of much promise and a great favorite at court, was the backer. and the game was proceeding merrily when Vedal, one of the players and a son of the the atrical manager who directed the Theatre Frao caise when Rachel made her detut, rushed on Lambert, and crying out "You are a sound-drelly cheat," slapped him in the face. The two young men were separated, and Vedal was asked to apologize by the host, but refused to do so, and proved to the satisfaction of the en tire company that Lambert had really been cheating. The affair being communic cd to the colonel of his regiment, a court of hopor was convened, the charges investigated and proved, and Lambert was expelled from the army.

This disgrace weighed so heavily on him that he resolved to commit suicide, and was on his way to the convenient Seine, when he passed by the apartments of his godfather, Gen. Rollin, and thought he would go in and say good byo. Gen. Rollin agreed with him that suicide was the best thing for him, unless he would emigrate, and as they were drinking a parting glass of wine that came from the cafe he suggested that Lambert might find it more comfortable in South Africa than in the Beine. The idea struck the captain as a good one, and, as he still had some influence at Court, he sailed for the cape under imperial auspises and with di-rections to do all in his power to forward French interests in that quarter of the glob :. At the cape he engaged in traffic with the natives, learned the savage dislents, ingratiated himself with the King of the Zulas, obtain: authority to remodel his army, introduced French tactics and European drill, officered his regiments with white adventurers and Borra. supplied his troops with munitions, and in short brought the Zulus to that pitch of military efficiency which has enabled them to meet the Eaglish army so successfully in the recent cam paigns. All of which every one will believe, as a matter of course, and no one will fail to perceive that the irie moral of this story is that if you can't whip as enemy yourself, it is a great thing to be able to teac's somebody class to do it. A BLIND MAN'S DUEL -It is doubtful if any theatre ever offered such volumes of 10 mantic incidents as the deck of the old time Mississippi steamer. In the old days before railroad traversed; the continent in every diraction, and the West was a wilderness. New Ocleans was the Mecca of travelers, and the fleet wave born palaces of the inland sea carried thousands of pleasure seekers to the South. It was then that life was carousal, and men and women gave themselves up to the most lavish enjoyments. Men were as prone to brawle as the spark to fly upward. Conspicuous among the fierce and rollicking habitues of the steamers was Captaia West, a noted duelist. One day he engaged in a controversy with a gen-tleman with whom he met on the deck, whom he scoused of staring at him impertioently.

"I am not looking at you," calmly replied the stranger, his eyes meanwhile fixed in a stony glare upon the duelist's face. "But you are, sir!" "I am not." The captain turned away, but a short time afterward he felt those stoney eyes were upon

"Why do you stare at me so intently?"

manded the captain.

him and following all his movements with pitt less farocity. It became inexpressibly apportug, and the captain at last determined to make an ead of it. Stepping up to the stranger he inquired, with suppressed passion: "Can you fight as well as look?"
"Perhaps so. I never tried it. P.case me, however, in position, and I will do my best. The singular conduct of the stranger had by this time attracted universal attention, and whispered conferences regarding his remarkable appearance agitated the little groups of persons all over the boat. In a short time however, the versal rounded to a landing for wood, and then the parties to the imprompte duel went ashore. The passenger was led off by a negro servant, who seemingly picked his way. Indeed, from the intense interest he was manifesting in the encounter, the colored servant was apparently more deeply interested in the ecounter than his master. But the time allowed for preliminaries was brief, and the men were speedily put in position and pistols placed in their hands. The word was given, and two ringing reports flashed out on the air. Captain West fell pierced to the heart. The stranger stood orect, calm and dignified. His second rushed up to him.

"Are you burt sir?" "No; how is it with my antagonist?" "Can't you set? You have killed him." "Ne; I am unable to see."
"You can't see?"

"No; I am blied!" And he was. The tragedy was a nine days' wonder, and all sorts of rumors were rife as to the identity of the fatal stranger. But who he was and wither he went was a mistery never solved. The circumstance went to make up an incident in the dark and blocdy memories
